MITCHELL'S TACTICS WON THE FIGHT.

Paddy Gorman Defeated in a Great Battle on the Pacific Slope.

SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.] SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 6 .- Paddy Gorman, of Anstralia, and young Mitchell, champion mid-die-weight of the Pacific coast, fought for a purse of $850 and the middle-weight champion ship of the Pacific coast at the rooms of the Golden Gate Athletic Club last night.

Both men entered the ring in prime condition, and within a couple pounds of each each other's weight.

Gorman cut out the work from the start, getting in some hard blows by swinging his right.

Mitchell acted on the defensive throughout the fight.

During the first few rounds Gorman seemed to have the best of the fight, but his hard work exhausted him, and then Mitchell started in to slug

Gorman, however, was game and stood right to his man. In the twenty-seventh round Gorman, however, was game and stood right up to his man. In the twenty-seventh round Gorman was almost completely exhaused and fell to avoid punishment. Failing to rise before the ten seconds were over, the fight was given to Mitchell. Four-ounce gloves were used.

It is the unanimous opinion of the spectators that the battle was the best in any class ever seen in San Francisco. It was a hot fight from tart to finish. Mitchell's victory is due entirely, to his superior ring tactics.

Mrs. Brodie was in the court-room during the proceedings.

THOSE CHARGES AGAINST TRUSTEE EHLERS THE BRIDE STILL CONCEALS HERSELF

Ic Talked Freely to Some Other Trustees, and Told Them a Story or Two, and Now They Have Gone Back on Him-The Case Is Not a Bit Like the Soulard

THE EVENING WORLD presents to its readers to-day the sum and substance of the serious, almost awful charges brought against School Trustee E. M. I. Ehlers, of the Ninth Ward, about which the School Commissioners were so very secret yesterday.

Col. Ehlers and his fellow-Commission Dr. McNamara and Mr. Seaman, who con stitute the majority in the Ninth Ward Board of Trustees. had been duly and thoroughly investigated by the By-Law Committee of the Board of Education on an indictment containing twelve counts, and the Committee had disagreed as to what their report should

Chairman Schmidt and Commissioners Gug

Chairman Schmidt and Commissioners Guggenheimer and Sprague, the majority of the Committee, thought enough had been proven to make it imperative that the three trustees should be asked to resign, and in the interests of the Ward and for harmony they thought the accusing minority of that Board of Trustees, Messrs. Benedict and Tinsdale, should also resign.

Commissioner Crary didn't, but he failed to formulate his own opinion. Commissioner Holt, however, made a minority report in which he declared that even if all the alleged facts charged against the trustees were true, they constituted no offense sufficient to warrant the request for the resignations of the culprits.

rant the request for the temperature colliprits.

That is the way the matter stood when the Board of Education met yesterday.

Commissioner Sprague threw a small bomb. He wanted the charges against Col. Ehlers, or at least four of the twelve counts in his indictment, reopened before the comnittee.

He declared that Col. Ehlers was a discredit mittee.

He declared that Col. Ehlers was a discredit to the school system. That the testimony taken by his Committee in secret session was unfit for the records of the Board that Col. Ehlers had disgraced his official ermine and, in short, that he was a very, very bad man.

He was voted down, however, by a vote of 9 to 7, the female members of the Board; being in the minority.

Of course, curiosity to know what were the awful misdeeds of Trustee Ehlers were strong, but the five commissioners who constitute the By-Law Committee were as dumb as oysters, and they alone held the secret.

Somebody, however, hinted that there was a woman in the case, and that eventually the case would read like the Soulard scandal. A morning paper stated this as a fact.

An EVENING WORLD reporter was told by Chairman Schmitt to day that so far as concerned the statement that the charges of immortality against Col. Ehlers being like those in the Soulard case, it was due to Col. Ehlers to say that it was untrue.

No charge of personal impurity had been made against Col. Ehlers, Further than that Commissioner Schmitt would not say, on the ground that what information be had was gained in executive session of his Committee.

Col. Ehlers, a big, open-faced, jolly man of full habit, was found at his desk at the Masonic Temple. He is Grand Secretary of that Order for this State.

He laughed when asked what he had to say to the charges. Then he grew serious and thundered:

"Simply that I am as innocent of moral turpitude as a babe. If I have committed.

thundered:

"Simply that I am as innocent of moral turpitude as a babe. If I have committed any offense it is telling stories to two or three men in private, not in public. Stories with a nub, for I am said to be quite a story-teller."

"Your case does not resemble the Soulard case, then?"

"No, d—nit! There! I say a spade is a spade, you are. Not at all the story spade is case, then?"

"No, d—n it! There! I say a spade is a spade, you see. Not at all like that case. No liaison here. The charges preferred by Benedict and Tinsdale against all three of us were neglect of duty and inefficiency.

"There were no specifications. The counts were made from the evidence afterwards taken."

wards taken.

The trouble grew out of the trial of Miss Pope, Principal of No. 3 female department, We supported her against Trustee Tinsdale. We were a majority. Miss Pope was fined finally by the Board of Education.

"Four counts are still charged against you personally, what are they?" asked the reporter.

personally, what are they?" asked the reporter.

Col. Ehler law thed again and produced a document. It was his indictment.

"I am charged with having behaved improperly at Grammar School No. 3, male department, Christmas time, 1886. This is what I did. We were having the usual 'Christmas racket' and 6.0 or 700 boys and many parents were assembled in the school with horns, tin pans, clappers, squeaks and other noisy things.

"Principal Sutherland was in the habit of introducing me to the school with a flattering speech, and this time I came prepared for him.

"When he got to praising my good qualities very hard I drew a big placard from under my coat and held it so that the boys could see it but the teacher couldn't.

It read like this

I AM SOMETHING OF A LIAR MYSELF.

"Then I am charged with haranguing the girls of No. 3 about their not being permitted to occupy the new annex to the building and advising them to go home and ask their parents to intercede for them with the Board of Educatiou.

"Third, they say that I made use of vulgar and obscene language about a female teacher. Well, I don't lie. I tell the truth. I said to one of the Trustees in private conversation. Miss — is an old maid. She ought to get married. It would maid. She ought to get married. It would do her more good than anything else.'

"The last charge is that I have deported myself in a manner tending to bring discredit on the system and under this head the evidence shows that once in a group of Commissioners and Trustees discussing the then recent appointment of Miss Dodge and Mrs. Agnew and some of the duties which Commissioners are supposed to perform, notably the going down into the furnace rooms under the schools; nosing around sewers and the like, I said something about Miss Dodge and her probable willingness to perform these duties, because she was strong-minded and something like a man in her qualities.

"This is the head and front of mine offending," concluded the Shakespearian trustee. "For being like other men I am a dam—ned scoundrel."

She Has Got the Opinion of Three Judges, Who Agree That the Signing of the First Contract Constituted Mrrriage - Her Mother Consents to Talk a Little-Mor-

The fluttering hearts of ex-Minister Harry F. Auld and his newly-made wife, Mrs. Emma Christie-Auld, are still as far apart as ever. All the parties concerned in the case are as clouse-mouthed as clams, and very little information can be gleaned. An Evening World reporter caught Mrs. Cooke, mother of the fair bride, as she was starting on a marketing tour this morning. He asked whether she would say anything

He asked whether she would say anything regarding the case She replied:

'I have nothing to say. My daughter is legally married and has been twice to Mr. Auld. The stories to the effect that she had some hold on Mr. Auld are false. He simply wanted to back down from his promise and she wouldn't let him. 'I hat's all there is to it.'

"But how is it they don't live together?" queried the reporter.

"I refuse to say. Now go away and don't bother me. I won't tell you anything more."

'Did Mr. Auld have anything to do with the management of Mrs. Christie's estate?" persisted the reporter.

the management of Mrs. Christie's estate?"
persisted the reporter.

"That report is not true. He never managed any of her property. There, I'm done," and she walked away.

The reporter followed, but not another word would she say.

Mrs. Christie is still living in seclusion and will not be seen.

A pert maid politely shut the door in the reporter's face when he asked to see Mr. Auld.

When a visit was next made to Mr. John Heimke, a grocer, at the corner of One Handred and Forty-first street and Alexander avenue.

He knew very little about the affair. He was asked by Mrs. Christie to witness her wedding to Mr. Auld. When he expressed his surprise she laughed and said:

"He's engaged to me, but he doesn't want to come to terms. But I think he will," she added, with another laugh.

Miss Winona Garrison, another of the witnesses, was not at home when the reporter called. Her mother, a pleasant lady, answered the ring and a few of the reporter's questions.

reporter's questions.

'It is not true," she said, "that my daughter had anything to do with forcing Mr. Auld to marry. She was simply asked to be a witness, and consented."

'Do you know anything of the inside history?"

"Do you know anything of the inside history?"

"I do not. I do know that they were legally married about eighteen months ago."

"By the contract?"

"Yes, and in the opinion of three leading judges in the city," she answered.

"The Evening World," she continued, 'had the correct story yesterday afternoon. Buy it and you will know all about it."

"Thanks," replied the reporter.

Then the door was gently closed, and the conversation thus ended.

The affair has created great excitement among Morrisania people, and it is the theme of every conversation. It is not known what legal steps Mrs. Auld intends to take, but should there be any the whole story will come out.

Addie Stanton's Lawyer Promises a Sensa tion.

"Dr. Smith left positive orders that no one should be admitted to see him to-day."

"Was Inspector Byrnes here last night?"

"No, but Mr. Daly expects him this morning." concluded Teeumseh.

Police Capt. Rielly looked as fresh as a June rose this morning, although he has been up and about continuously for the last fortyeight hours trying to find some clue to the men who attempted to hold up the old gambler in that Fourth avenue flat.

"I have absolutely no news to give yon," he said, in answer to the reporter's queries.

"How is the Stanton and the Hammond this morning?"

"As well as can be expected under the circumstances. They occupy different cells, sleep on a hard board and order their meals from a restaurant."

"Have they any money?"

"Have they any money?"
"Have they any money?"
"Not a cent, "They had not a cent or a bit of jewelry, nor was there any money or jewelry found in their apartments when they were arrested," said the Captain.
"Stanton has a pretty good wardrobe," he added.
Since their incarcaration raither woman

Since their incarceration neither woman has been allowed to see any visitor except their counsel. Several women and one or two men have called to see them, but were not permitted to do so. Lawyer Le Barbier, their legal adviser, said to an Evening World reporter to-day:

"I do not believe that Daly will prosecute my clients. I do not see how he can have the cheek to go against them at all."
"They won the can have the cheek to go against them."

the cheek to go against them at all."

"Then you know positively that there have been dealings between him and the Stanton woman?"

"I must refuse to answer that question now, but you be in court when the case comes up to morrow morning, and I promise you you will bear some astonishing facts.
That is all I can or will say to-day."

"Do you think Mr. Daly will be in Court to-morrow?" asked the reporter.

"Do you think Mr. Daly will be in Court to morrow?" asked the reporter.

"Yes. I think he will be there to morrow." he concluded in a tone that meant.

"but not after to morrow."

From other sources more of the woman Stanton's history was learned to day.

When she was running the house 36 Lexington avenue Louis Bishop shot himself there. The affair caused quite a sensation at the time. At that time she was known as Mrs. Edgecomb.

GREEN'S DAY OF SUSPENSE.

INTENSE INTEREST IN THE CLOSING SCENES OF THE MURDER TRIAL.

An Excited Crawd in the Brooklyn Sessions Court-The Wealthy Prisoner Calm and Composed-Gen. Tracy Argues that the Killing of Young Nicholas Goldenkirch

A very large and at times excited audience watched the trial of Charles W. Green for the murder of Nicholas Goldenkirch in the Brooklyn Sessions Court this morning. As the close of the trial approaches interest in the fate of the wealthy real-estate agent in-ity of people who have been tried for murder. He is neat in his dress, modest and quiet in his demeaner, and his actions during the trial have been those of a gentleman. He also owns a great deal of property, and was a social lion in the Eastern District.

The caim but earnest way in which he told his story of what happened on the night of Goldenkirch's taking-off, and of the events leading up to it, has impressed everybody in his favor, and many expressed the hope that the verdict will not be "Guilty of murder in the first degree."

When Green entered the court-room all eyes were riveted on him, but the closest scrutiny failed to discover any sign that he had suffered unusual mental strain.

Gen. Tracy opened the proceedings by summing up for the defendant. He defined the various laws bearing upon the different forms of killing and then claimed that his "client could not be convicted at all. The killing of Goldenkirch, he said, was not premeditated, and when the fatal shot was fired there was no intention of murder.

That Goldenkirch was killed by a bullet quiet in his demeanor, and his actions shot was fired there was no intention of murder.

That Goldenkirch was killed by a bullet from a pistol held by Green was not denied. The question was: Was the killing justifiable or excusable?

If it was the result of a misfortune or an accident, it was excusable. Did the pistol go off in the struggle between the two men? If it did, then there must be an acquittal.

Green, he said, was in his own house with his family. He was defending himself against an intruder who had been warned not to come. It was a principle of the world that a man's house was his custle, and even a king might not enter. It was his right to say who should enter. No man had a right to enter the house.

the house.

When Goldenkirch called that night he was When Goldenkirch called that night he was warned away. He refused, and Green had the right to defend his home by any and all means. Goldenkirch was a trespasser who had been forbidden to enter, but in spite of this he forced his way into the house. Under these circumstances killing would be justifiable and proper.

The man had jumped from the root of the five-story building, and the jump was his second step, within a few hours, looking to self-destruction.

For the first he had taken poison, which failed to accomplish quickly enough the end he sought.

Burkhardsmaier was thirty-three years old and was formerly a cook at the Atlantic Garden. He lately purchased a saloon in the building from which he jumped to his death, paying $800 for the property. It proved a poor investment, and on finding that he had been duped out of his money he became first despondent and then deranged.

Burkhardsmaier opened his saloon as usual this morning, but shortly before his leap from the roof he asked a friend to tend bar, and he went upstairs.

While he lay in the bed suffering from the effects of the poison he had taken his wife went below to assist the friend in the salcon at his request, but mistrusting something wrong sne sent for her sister, who lives at 332 Eldridge street, who came at once to her brother-in-law's bedside.

He seemed to be in a dazed condition, and muttered that he must die soon. Then he raved wildly and said that he was going to leave the world.

The sister went downstairs to call his wife, and she had no sooner left the room than the half-dressed man sprang from the bed and made for the door.

made for the door.

At the time the only other occupant of the room was little Konrad, the six-year-old son, who ran after his father and told him to come back. Then, as Burkhardsmaier started to go upstairs, the boy yelled for his mother and oegan to laboriously climb the steps his father had taken.

Hearing the cry of the child, the mother came out of the saloon just in time to see her husband on the landing of the third floor and the six-year-old boy half way up, crying out in his shrill tones and struggling hard to catch his father.

Once the man half hesitated, looked back and seemed about to return to the two pair of arms stretched out to him from the floor below.

Then, suddenly, he faced about and started on, while the woman increased her speed and passed the tottering child on the stairs leading from the third to the fourth

It was evident that the man was making for the roof, for he ascended the steps which led to the scuttle. The difficulty with which this was forced permitted Mrs. Burkhards maier and the little Konrad to almost catch up, and the woman was just placing her foot on the last flight of steps when the fastening of the scuttle gave way, and an instant later

He paced up and down the roof, muttering, and occasionally looking over the edge into into the street until his pursuers were almost within reach, when, inclining his body toward the street, he deliberately allowed himself to fall, while the agonized wife sank helpless upon the roof.

A crowd quickly gathered about the place where the man's body had fallen, but the police were on hand, too, and the curious throng was kept back.

The crushed body was picked up and tenderly borne to the undertaking shop at 82 Stanton street.

This morning Officer John J. Shannon, of the wenty-seventh Precinct, saw a thin old man sitting on the steps of the L station at One Hundred and Fifth street and Second avenue, his head drooping forward and blood streaming over his waistcoat and coat from a ghastly wound in his throat.

were dressed while he was under the influence of ether.

The old man was John Eichman, or Richter, of 166 Orchard street. He is a German and worked in a piane factory. He is sixty-one years old and lived in a poor little room, sparely furnished, in the cramped-up tenement-house. He had a sister who came to see him occasionally, and he rarely went out except to go to work in the morning at 7 o'clock and return in the evening at 6. Then he would cook himself something to eat or go out to one of the cheap hash-houses in the neighborhood.

He seldom spoke to any one, as he drooped along, bent and shrivelled with his sixty-one years. Without being melancholy, he was generally very quiet, and at times downcast.

He made a bad gash in his throat, and his stomach was wounded, as well as his left wrist, with a razor when found this morning.

At the hospital the Superintendent said it was impossible to tell yet whether the old man would die or not.

"I have no power to act in your case now," said the magistrate in a kinder tone. "My only course according to law is to hold you in default of $1,000 bail for trial."

The unfortunate girl said she had secured a situation in a Brooklyn millinery establishment, and begged again for a chance to reform. She was led off to prison weeping bitterly.
